

Sure hope

A Post Office is not where I would expect to hear my favourite music, but unmistakably there was one of my favourite songs, and being sung with feeling and finesse. I even started to hum, and I noticed other people around me doing the same. The mood in the Post Office lifted and I started to feel good. I turned around to the person behind me to share some of my good feeling and found myself facing a very attractive young woman with a baby in her arms, holding on to a pusher with another child snuggled up comfortably inside, and a bigger child hanging onto the pusher. I was amazed to discover that this young woman with three children under five was the source of my favourite melody. And the name of the song? 'Hold on tight to your dream'.

At the time I was struggling to hold on to my dreams, summoning all my faith and hope to believe that God is with me in my difficult circumstances. Hearing my song being sung so sweetly by this young woman as she gazed lovingly at her baby in arms seemed to tell me to wake up to myself, and lifted my spirits out of their doldrums. This young mother was holding onto her dream and yet the peaceful homely scene no doubt disguised much struggle and pain. But here was the mother unknowingly inspiring me and other strangers in the Post Office.

I went home with a lighter step and found myself opening my eyes a lot wider to the good around me without focusing on the darker side of my life, which up till then had been in danger of swamping me.

Our God-given hope

Though we are discouraged by the almost unbridled wickedness of our times and by discord which damages social life and impedes generous efforts at reform, consolation is offered to anybody who knows how to receive it. There lives in our world a People of God, still full of humble and honest faith, ready to transform the obstacles and difficulties of life into steps leading to new heights, and happy to have found in the love taught by Christ the power and joy of a new road: renewal and reconciliation.

Pope Paul VI (1897-1978)

Inexhaustible comfort

I was talking to a man in the hospital the other day after he had emerged from an operation in which he donated one of his kidneys to his wife. He explained it to me as a natural expression of his marriage vows, to love his wife for better, for worse, for richer for poorer, in sickness and in health! (Laurie)

It was twenty years since my dear friend, and her sister and brothers, had suffered the loss of their mother. In order to mark the occasion, they decided to gather the family, now including spouses and children, to share a meal. The menu would consist of the dishes they remembered their mother preparing, in some cases served from the same bowls and platters. Of course, as they enjoyed the meal, the stories and reminiscences followed. What a wonderful way to celebrate the life and memory of a much-loved mother! (Tracey)
